

The Present

By J. W. Henson

I drink of the present.
The future is a dream
I cannot taste.
The past flows beyond me,
And having drunk there
I thirst again.

If I do not live now,
I shall exit
Having never lived.
For the future is a dream,
And the past
Flows on beyond me.