

"Hitler's Zoo"

By Robin B Lipinski

(This is dedicated to the Wisconsin hate wrought at the fair)

Time robbed, bombs drained, actions killed.
 Brother against brother, north, south, east, west, all the nations tried, many died.
 War has fallen, it fell again.
 Mussolini, Adolph, Emperor Sun, clashed rekindled, hatred sprung.

Countries, once full of riches, fell down while bombs fell, actions killed.
 Starvation of Russia, death in trenches, tanks seeking fodder; children, mother, father, cross the river Styx.

Wolves of the sea carried the Nazi, feasting on shipping, a pack come calling.
 Wolves of the cage cried, hungry, thin, wasted on water, there was no eating.
 Big cats howled, monkeys cried, bears ripped each other's hide, demons in command, where is the answer they were seeking?

Jack boots smashing, sanity crashing, actions killing, animals starving.
 A solution to a problem comes to their end.
 Meat there was plenty, feasting across German land.
 While people starved, the pride of Africa suddenly found the gift.

Trains chugging, black smoke rising, camps full, resources straining, what else could a monster do?
 Fresh for them, the meat was fresh, the hunger sated, it all worked for the best.
 When Hell came to the world, they fed the animals the flesh.
 Gypsy, freak, and of course, the Jew.
 Into the maw of wild, they fell dead.
 When the demons of war come again, will they be coming for you?

It never ends.

The End
